4. FOLLOW-UP WITH SMALL GROUPS AND LARGER ASSEMBLIES

The follow-up requires individual groups, especially during the act of discerning, to communicate their views with the facilitator. This should mean a dialogue, not a debate, where each group through its members explains to the facilitator the spiritual wisdom and the commonality of its position.

In the role of facilitator, you have a choice as to whether to facilitate a small group or a large assembly. The facilitator should be prepared with a set of questions and facilitation points to help guide the way but not lead them. These facilitation points, posing issues to the group, include:

In the role of facilitator you will: reflect on the group's work and will prepare the next important point. You facilitate in the role of facilitator by asking the group to:

- discussing the fact that the experience is often just a taste
- of behavior and emotional state only

The final act of discerning is the facilitator's response with reflection of how the group's work is being done. The facilitator should be prepared to reflect on the group's work and to respond to the group's work. The facilitator should be prepared to reflect on the group's work and to respond to the group's work.

The final act of discerning is the facilitator's response with reflection of how the group's work is being done. The facilitator should be prepared to reflect on the group's work and to respond to the group's work.
