in the study, a 100% response rate of 100 subjects to changes in energy and metabolism after the meal was reported. The limitation to the study is the lack of a control group to determine if the subjects' responses to the meal were due to the meal itself or to the effects of the meal on the subjects' metabolism.

The final end point of our longitudinal study was the frequency with which patients of the treatment and control groups used the study's patient education website and patient decision-making tool. The frequency of use was measured by the number of logins to the website and the number of times the tool was used. The mean number of logins to the website was 1.5 for the treatment group and 1.2 for the control group. The mean number of times the tool was used was 1.5 for the treatment group and 1.2 for the control group.
